RESPONSE IN CRISIS

Our partners need us most when a disaster hits or when conflict or war breaks out. We partner directly with local women’s groups, so we’re able to mobilize resources immediately and effectively.

With our partner network and your support, we are able to get aid where it’s needed most and in ways that prioritize the women and families most at risk.

When we carry out relief efforts we ensure they respond to the priorities and perspectives of local communities. Our swift and direct action brings crucial resources - like food, medical care, shelter, and advocacy - and allows local communities to recover for the long-haul.

In 2021, 19% of MADRE’s grantmaking, made possible by you, supported urgent crisis response:

- 49 grants
- 32 organizations

MAKE A GIFT TO SUPPORT LOCAL WOMEN LEADERS
The pandemic has taken the heaviest toll on those who are most marginalized within their communities, especially women and girls. MADRE funds locally-driven humanitarian aid and healthcare, food security and alternative livelihood programs, and support services for survivors of violence. Your support of our partners through the pandemic is lifesaving. In 2021:

- MADRE was the sole provider of funding for 69% of our partners.
- In Nepal, we funded food aid, health & hygiene kits, and peer counseling for over 400 Indigenous women and girls with disabilities.
- MADRE provided food, shelter, and medical aid to 500 trans people in rural India.
- In Sudan, we distributed hygiene kits and food baskets to 10,000 individuals in marginalized rural communities.

Since the Taliban takeover in Afghanistan, you have made it possible for MADRE to accelerate our funding for shelters and emergency relocation efforts for women’s rights activists. We are ensuring that the most critical work of Afghan women's organizations - healthcare, girls' education, violence prevention - can continue, despite being forced underground.

We are also supporting key leaders of the Afghan women's movement to advocate at the international level for humanitarian aid and women's participation in negotiations about the future of Afghanistan.

Now living in exile, one of these women shared her gratitude to MADRE and you for "saving my life and the lives of my children."

- With your support, MADRE helped protect more than 1,000 women's rights activists and their families who were facing assassination attempts by the Taliban, including over 250 young women human rights defenders.
In Haiti, our partners have dealt with unthinkable devastation, following a magnitude 7.2 earthquake and Tropical Storm Grace. Your gifts to MADRE are providing humanitarian aid, like food, water, and healthcare. Our partners are also working to prevent gender-based-violence, which invariably surges in the wake of disasters like this.

Following the destruction in Haiti, MADRE rapidly distributed grants to seven local organizations across the country.

In 2021, 16% of MADRE grantmaking was allocated to climate devastation:

- 22 grants
- 19 organizations
